Commissioner Adelstein:

Dear Commissioner,

From my perspective the major TV networks are too often a conduit for social poison - this certainly applies to the "violence as entertainment" that is so prevalent. This conduit does not run directly into our home but we are all impacted by its effects via others in the community who drink from it daily.

There are many who would be grateful, and many more who would benefit if you would raise the standards for broadcasting in our nation by restricting violence on TV. (Why not use 1960's level violence as a reference point and lead things back a ways in that direction?)

Thank you for your efforts on our behalf.

Sincerely,

Terry Stratton

To the FCC: Please seriously open your minds and hearts to the awful reality our children being so negatively affected by violence on TV. To me this is so obvious- that I do not understand why the FCC can not understand this. Violent programs are garbage that is put into our children's heads resulting in garbage coming out in their behavior, values, etc.: garbage in, garbage out. Kids and adults alike are influenced by TV, or no one would advertise on TV. Let's get with it and expose our children to good. Please do your job.

Dear Commissioners,

In regard to your inquiries from the public on the effects of TV violence on the youth of our country -

As a child of the 1940's and 1950's, I watched cowboy movies in which people were killed. I also watched programs such as "Gunsmoke" and "Dragnet". I never felt that I nor my siblings were affected by these programs.

I also watched the "Three Stooges" most of my life and feel there is no harm done by their antics. I never attempted to copy them, nor did my siblings.

The difference in programing today is that it is more graphic and many times does not teach a moral. Though many believe that is irrelevant, I believing we are seeing just the opposite in the behavior of our youth. There has been an increase in violence across our country.

In days past, the guilty party was punished - good won out. In todays programing, the guilty is as likely to get away with his wickedness as to be held responsible.

There is no need for graphic violence. Neither children nor adults gain anything from this. Why would we call this e entertaining?

I would dare say there is little regulation by parents of most children regarding their television viewing habits, especially our teenagers, who are probably the most impressionable. I have seen this with my grandchildren and children with whom I work. It seems too much trouble for parents to take time for this.

Commissioner Abernathy:

Violence on TV is degrading the values of children and those I am responsible for. They have come to accept the violence and TV's displayed values as the norm. They are being desensitized about immoral actions. I must have the option to eliminate objectionable material of any violence, adult nature or life style from being accessible by anyone I am responsible for in regard to teaching moral values.

Sincerely,
